

LPR VI Cup

11.s06.e01

He who lives in a glass house should perhaps not throw stones
Robert Stevenson

Hint 1

Continuing his experiments with the bathyscaphe, Ant chose a new combination of newly familiar tumbler switches and, not thinking twice, he pulled the starter lever. «Denise» especially abruptly started moving with velocity v . Ant was thrown into a chair, and something, which he earlier regarded as a part of upholstery, opened due to inertia, turning out to be a secret drawer. After shutting the down engines, our hero curiously inspected the drawer and found several logbooks and a book with burgundy binding. The book had golden letters on it, reading “Deep-sea beasts and where to find them”.

Mesmerized by the find, the little voyager dived into reading and found a page which by some unexplainable and incomprehensible reason particularly attracted his attention

* * *

Antino-Pilgrimo (Formica Peregrina)

Features: Quite a slippery one. Can (and will) disappear into the water at the sight of danger, also using neutral buoyancy for movement. Might be intelligent. During close observation of these species it was found that they are seeking to expand their hobby, hobbit, habitant habitat and build something similar to terrascaphe.

(Edge note) I didn't quite understand: is it a water pretending to be an ant, or an ant pretending to be a water.

Delta Fish (Piscis Delta)

Features: Even by fish standards, it has an impressively large air bladder. Typically inherits inhabits river mouths flowing into lakes, seas or oceans.

(Hedge note) quite an ordinary fish except that it's partly stingray

Megalodon (Otodus megalodon)

Features: Inhabit the waters of Central Asia. According to unverified rumors, was last seen in 1860. This species likely has gone completely extinct by now due to chaotic and illegal poaching - a monstrous mistake which caused considerable trouble. A great pity. :(

(Ledge note) Such a rare species, especially in the waters of Central Asia, must be preserved in the future!

Punkus Fish (Pisces Punkus)

Features: Roll deep with the homies. Grind against the seabed. Bounce off the rocks. Swim upstream in a stole in a shoal while looking dope.

(Joyful note) Lit fish.

* * *

At that exact moment, Ant realized just how meaningful this entire adventure had been. Tight in his six-legged hold was a book containing precious information about creatures who could aid his journey to another continent.

He closed the book and dreamily looked in a porthole. Though murky and scratched glass the Formicae Pilgrim was staring at him. Bathyscaphe suddenly jolted and the Antino-Piligrimo's image dissolved in the water like a phantom.

